

Globalization is a process of interaction and integration among the people, companies, and governments of different nations, a process driven by international trade and investment. This process has effects on the environment, culture, political systems, and on economic development. Yes Globalization is the integration of economic, political, and cultural systems across the globe. Globalization affects the economy by getting things such as computers. In addition it also helps culture because we can get supplies for building houses.

It is not new. For thousands of years, people and corporations have been buying from and selling to each other across the world. For example, such as across Central Asia that connected China and Europe during the Middle Ages. Globalization caused the first World War in 1914. Globalization has spread more widely.

Benefits Of globalization is that people will gain more technology. Advances in medicine, improved public health policies, and greater food supplies have lengthened life expectancy. In the 1950s, 178 children per every 1000 births died before reaching their first birthday. By the 1990s the infant rate in these countries had declined to 64 per 1000. Life expectancy went up from 44 years in 1960 to 59 years in 1999.

Money, goods, and manufacturing have become far more mobile than they used to be, with the result that corporations are freer than ever to move, and finance to invest, wherever they choose. All because of globalization. National governments are less able to control the activities of businesses than in the past. The expansion of the Internet and the growth of other communications technologies has brought cultures in greater contact with each other. People are becoming citizens of the world who are able to sample music, art, film, traditions, and other cultural expressions from many different countries.
